How much will the Navy's 2025 shipbuilding plan cost?

The construction of new ships under the Navy's 2025 shipbuilding plan would cost $1.075 trillion in 2024 dollars in total over the next three decades, according to an analysis carried out by the Congressional Budget Office.

Why did shipbuilding costs increase in 2025?

The growth in costs reflected in the Navy's and CBO's estimates for the 2025 plan is attributable to both an increase in the estimated costs of many shipbuilding programs and to the larger number of ships that the Navy would purchase under that plan compared with what it would have purchased under the alternatives in the 2024 plan.

Why is the Navy not doubling its shipbuilding budget?

Despite a near doubling of its shipbuilding budget over 2 decades, the Navy hasn't increased its number of ships. And its new ships have consistently been delayed and had higher costs and lower capabilities than promised. Recent investments--in the billions--in shipyard infrastructure and workforces have yet to yield desired improvements.
